I notice in The Tribune of the 5th ult a card, signed P. J. MAHAN, which, although an ingenious mode of advertising his Ecces, is of a somewhat personal nature.

I have no acquaintance with that gentleman, have not named kim, and have, therefore, no controversy with him. I shall assuredly not allow myself to be drawn into one.

The evidence that spurious Italian Bees are in the country is conclusive to Mr. Langstroth and others beside myself, and I om satisfied with having given a needed cautton. If Mr. Mahan recis touched by the caution, he has doubtiest cause for it.

I cannot consent to come into any sort of competition with him. My queens are moreover needed in their own hives, and every because the tready for sale; when they are ready I may be inclined to say more.

Also fer sale a limited number of the Subscription Edition, on superfine paper, with portrait on India piper. Two volumes, octave, price $5.

These familiar letters of forty consecutive years, out of a life of fifty-five years, and addressed to one correspondent, furnish to temselves the best memoir of their writer. Over everything in the shape of diary or autobiography, such a series has the advantage of presenting the main in the successive phases of his character and opinions, as well as in their final mould. In the collection now given to the public, the writer passes before us, in his own undisquised expressions, from the frivolities and crudities of fifteen to the maturity of his half century.
